Colebrook Bosson Saunders host interior photography master class as part of London Design Festival

Leading architectural photographer Morley von Sternberg will be providing insider tips at Colebrook Bosson Saunders' event on 17th September 2008 organised as part of the London Design Festival.

Morley von Sternberg initially trained and began his career as an architect before establishing his name as one of the most in-demand architectural photographers in the UK today. Morley has been commissioned to photograph an extraordinary array of landmark buildings (including Terminal 5, the Sanderson Hotel and the Hayward Gallery) and portraits of some of their creators and leading lights (including Zaha Adid, Antony Gormley and Lord Norman Foster).

Colebrook Bosson Saunders design and manufacture products that can transform an interior space, minimising the appearance of necessary IT and AV equipment to enhance architects' and designers' vision for an uncluttered and beautiful interior.

Capturing a quality photograph of an interior space is probably one of the most challenging tasks for any photographer. Those within architectural or interior design practices understand the value of quality photography whether it be for submitting details to the architectural press, entering awards and competitions or for the practice's own website or marketing material.

The workshop at Colebrook Bosson Saunders will commence with a brief presentation by Morley von Sternberg about his work and his approach, followed by a hands-on session under Morley's tutorage. A critique will follow with the opportunity to learn some of the tricks of the trade and receive one-to-one guidance.

The event on Wednesday 17th September 2008 is free but numbers are strictly limited so pre-registration is essential.

Potential participants can sign up for the event at the London Design Festival website www.londondesignfestival.com
